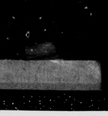
Head Of The House

Lesson for March 1, 1964



Background Scripture: Luke 10:38-42; John 11:1 through 12:11.

Devotional Reading: John 11:1-15.

A picture-motto often seen though it is many years old by now, starts this way: "Christ Is The Head Of This House." It usually shows a picture of Christ such pictures are the way of imagination. What is not imagination is the motto — that is, when the household lives up to it. With the help of the Gospels, let us see what it can mean to say truly, Christ is the head of this house, your house.

In the Gospels Luke and John we are given glimpses of a home where Jesus was really the head of the household, even though that expression itself is never used. It was the home of Mary, Martha and Lozarus.

Seeing Things His Way

That Jesus was the head of that household, that family group, does not mean that he interfered with their work or their arrangements. He was not like meddlers, and Jesus was not a meddler. He would lean over backwards, so to speak, to keep from being one. When they had him to dinner you remember, Martha got quite tired and cross working hard over the dinner. Jesus had be been inclined to take over running the house, might have ordered Martha to put out the kitchen fire and let them eat sandwiches for once. He might have demanded that she sit beside Mary and listen while he talked. But he let Martha do it her way. He did not put in his oar till the right minute. And when he did, it was in the most tactful and affectionate way possible. He didn't say Martha was wrong. What he said was that she was "anxious and troubled" — unhappy, in short. He didn't say Mary was better than Martha, he said simply that she had chosen the "good portion," the "better part." He was inviting Martha to look at things his way. Ten days, ten years, half a lifetime after that dinner, Mary would remember what Jesus had been saying, but who would remember what they had to eat? A glowing true thought often remembers is worth far more than the finest foods perfectly served. See it my way, Jesus said.

His Way Of Doing

This was not the only occasion Jesus worked with some member of the family to see things as he saw them. But consider another point. Jesus had his own way of doing things, and he was not being conceited when he urged others to do likewise. Take the incident John tells of this Mary's pouring out upon Jesus an expensive box of perfume. What a waste Some of the men said. But Jesus did not think it a waste. He himself was often known to do the same thing — waste a great deal that was precious, out of sheer love. He told his disciples many things that they never remembered. He made many a plea for understanding and support that fell on deaf ears.

In Time of Death and Sorrow

It is particularly remarkable how Jesus dealt with the great trial and tragedy in that home. Don't most of us feel awkward, embarrassed and silent in the time when death and great grief come to those we love? Jesus certainly did not talk to Martha and Mary, after Lazarus died, as if death were not real. He did not try to distract their attention by trite remarks — we all have to die sometime, we must remember what a good man Lazarus was, and all that. What Jesus did was to say in effect: "Think of Me. I am the Life." He brought comfort by bringing—himself.

Now maybe we can see a little better what it means to say Christ is the head of this house." A home where he is welcomed, in spirit, every day; a home where every one in it comes more and more to see things as he would do them; the home where "Love thyself last" is the daily rule; and above all, the home where in time of crisis and grief, and even in the hour of death, Christ comes foremost in the mind—this is the home where he is truly the head.

Pastor Speaks

Thinking Christianly

This should be the goal of every life; yet it is more difficult than one may think.

Each life has its particular emphasis. This is true of all areas including the religious. I find no difficulty in "preaching" against drinking, smoking, gambling; for I am not guilty of these. But what about the sins of the spirit! The areas where attitudes, prejudice, and the whole tenor of life where thoughts have been in another direction; to think Christianly is most difficult.

Too many Christians have taken on the original experience of Salvation as all that is involved in the Christian life. However, we must remember that it is only the beginning. As a matter of fact salvation is not confined to our "inner lives" It has to do with the total life of the individual in his total relationship with God. Salvation is health and wholeness and fulfilment of being. It is the disclosure and the realization of man's true destiny. As one grows in the Christian way factors that impede relationship to others come to play that causes one to grow with the traditional concept of living. This creates real conflict. The early Christian who was converted found in his circumstances they were without friends or food. This presented real trouble. Our task is to face this same thing today in our world. And we must ourselves in real trouble were to think seriously about the full application of the sayings of Christ.

Paul says, "whatsoever things are true . . . honest . . . just, pure. . . . lovely . . . good . . . if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things." Phil. 4:8.

A friend was talking to a business prospect about setting up a certain kind of business in the community. The man owned the property in which business was to be established and questioned the wisdom of the kind of place being opened. The client said, "I don't know much about matters what people think they can make money, if you make money, it really doesn't matter. The business man replied, "you should have stopped to say, "I don't think."

Far too few of us do any thinking today. We let others do it for us, and then find that things do not come out as we had hoped. We are living in a day of thought, and the trends in education, politics, economics, and in religion, demand that we think things through.

Jesus is the greatest teacher of thought known to man. He excites the imagination, moral courage, the spirit of dedication like no other one or idea.

Get acquainted with him and attend the church of your choice and think seriously about your relationship to God in Christ. He offers challenges that will cure the dull areas and all that goes with living.
